It was in St. James Hall, and there was a big stage for the great men to strut about on. Sullivan and Smith stood side by side in the middle of it, and it was a fine chance to compare the two representatives of muscle. The men were in many respects exact opposites. Smith is short and chunky, with big swelling chest, thick, short legs, with big swelling chest, thick, short legs, with tremendous caives, short bull neck, square jaw, low forehead, smooth face, expression good humored, but lacking inicitigence, plain clothes, short jacket of coarse material, thick boots, pot hat, and a few diamonds, a perfectly developed specimen of the buildeg in human nature, but with a moest lovely set of white teeth.

A different picture must be drawn to give Americans an idea of what Sullivan looked like. Imagine a man as caim and quiet as though the earth were his and all the rest of us his tenants; not a wonderfully tall man, but one who looks very tall; a body so weit shaped that it seems not unusually muscular, and with the wonderful power egread out all it, not stored in knobs and bunches of muscle, as in the ordinary strong man. Sullivan's fee is a hetter one than that of any man in the ordession, and one in which good nature of the struggles through the satisfied expression bring the earth word brown bat, but one of glistering sits, tall and very curly brimmed. He was the evening dress, such as is worn by nices to be retained until the whole of the purchase money is paid.

Be was to evening dress, such as is worn by nices there in the state of the Carponal security, and to bear interest prometry in the occasion, and the corporation to the following property it. American and the corporation of the state of the corporation to the such as a point on the cast side of Peyton street, brunning that point the word with true mendous calves, short legs, with tremendous calves, short legs, with tremendous calves, short legs, with tremendous calves, short legs, with the line of Peyton

All those yould for respect, and Sullivan made one. "Gentlemen," he said, "I am much please with this country and with the reception you have given me, and I hope I'll on input to deserve it. As far as Mr. Smith equinne to deserve it. As far as Mr. Smith here is concerned, of course, I hope I'll best him, and go home leaving him licked; and of course, he hopes and you hope, being pa-triotic, that he'll get the best of me, and send me home beaten. I can only say, I'm afraid you'll be badly disappointed. [Loud yells, and cheers and laughter.]

Then there were small sparring matches to sharpen the appetite for the big one—and at last Sullivar came on. He was naked to the waist, and all the red faced young gentlemen saw the most perfect body they had ever looked at. Sullivan's body, neck and arms were pink, a peculiarity of his own, and harmonized with the pink silk tights that he were. A silk American flag tigotly rolled was worn as a belt, and on his hands were gloves so big and soft as to look most attractive. Jack Ashton was there to be knocked about, and Sullivan
